I have a C# Windows Form app, and I want to make the controls look more compact. Is this possible? When I make controls compact, they look more compact, but the text also gets condensed on the form. I'd like to have the controls smaller, but keep the text at the same size. For instance, I'd like to have the "Add" button below look like this: And the main text of the form to look like this: These are screenshots of what it currently looks like. I want to make the controls look smaller in a way that doesn't make the text look smaller. I want the controls to be the same size as the text. A: You cannot achieve this with the current Windows Forms. It is all or nothing. You can use WPF if you really want to have the look and feel of what you are asking for. There are some controls like the SplitButton which can produce the effect you are looking for. Kris has been given a bike of his own, but to avoid being bullied again he needs some advice on how to use it. Unfortunately, there are plenty of other bikes on the roads. Kris should only ride by himself on the road as this will confuse and annoy the other students. Kris explains...
