postmortem interval (pmi) can also be determined by considering the condition of the hair. hair can be in a good condition after a period of 14 days. in some conditions, such as high humidity, a good quality of hair may be noticed even after a period of 6 months. the decomposition process is also slower in winter as compared to summer. the quality of the hair also reflects the age of the victim. the hairs of a newborn show a different condition than those of a mature adult. in general, hairs of a newborn show a relatively lesser degree of decomposition than hairs of an adult, especially after a period of 48 hours. [33] [34] hair can be a useful tool in estimating the postmortem interval. fischer and perry, in a study using postmortem lividity and pmi estimation, observed that the lividity distribution pattern in the supine position was unreliable for estimating the time of death, as it progressed from the head to the foot. they also observed that the lividity distribution in the lateral position was relatively more reliable for estimating pmi. this study was conducted on the bodies of 200 individuals who were declared dead after a head injury and were brought to the mortuary within 3 hours of their death. of these, 110 bodies were found to be in a lateral position and 90 were in a supine position. the average pmi estimates were found to be  $6.8 \pm 7.9$  hours for the lateral position and  $13.4 \pm 6.9$  hours for the supine position. [31] this is also the reason why, in a seated position, the lower half of the body is usually blue, while the upper half is usually purple. the postmortem staining in the seated position is also more vivid than in a supine position, and lividity distribution is more uniform. antemortem and postmortem trauma may be difficult when there is overlapping in the clinical presentation. the purpose of this protocol is to provide a guide for the collection of appropriate specimens for pathologic examination. this is the recommended approach because it preserves the highest level of information. it allows for the collection of specimens by pathologists, physicians, and clinicians for diagnostic testing. This protocol also provides guidelines for the collection of physical evidence, such as blood, soil, and hair in cases of death or injury. It is a thorough, step-by-step protocol for the collection of evidence that will minimize the chances of destruction of evidence by the collection personnel and the preservation of the integrity of evidence. Livor has become particularly important in determining the postmortem position of infants (eg, prone sleeping position) when first responders have moved the decedent before the arrival of agency investigators. As breakdown of tissues, including the vasculature, progresses, red cell extravasation into the soft tissues may actually simulate antemortem hemorrhage, as demonstrated in the image below. Differentiation is made in the context of the location and pattern of the discoloration and the events surrounding the death. in some cases, it may not be possible to differentiate antemortem trauma from postmortem artifactual effects. in reality, many deaths occur outside of these ideal settings, and additional confounding variables may be present (eg, layered clothing, obesity, fever). efforts to improve the precision and reliability of estimating pmi are ongoing, including the use of artificial intelligence in pmi estimation.

[ 3, 4 ] wilk et al describe a method for calculating early pmi using noninvasive skin thermometry in conjunction with a finite-difference model to correct for nonstandard conditions. [ 5 ] the longer the pmi, the less accurate the pmi estimate becomes. 5ec8ef588b
