the ecls of students who use english as a second or other language (esol/osl) should be closely monitored. an individualized approach with regular ecl testing should be used, based on available student information and training experience. the english language training of foreign language students, such as in foreign universities, tends to be infrequent and irregular. the student's academic performance, whether in the military or civilian sector, can be used to demonstrate the effectiveness of the language education provided. the student's level of english proficiency, whether general english language skills or the language skills required for a specific course in the military, should be carefully monitored over the entire duration of the course. applying the principles and guidelines set forth in this policy memo to ims training, the same general policy discussed above for elt applies to the fot exemption program. fot course programs at foreign institutions should be approved by mildep/ccmd leadership at the dsca level, but foreign nations have the option to nominate their own military representatives to consider the request. if approved by dsca/mildep, the training program should then be coordinated with the dlielc to ensure that there are adequate facilities at the fot host institution to handle an increased number of students. fot agreements with host countries should be reviewed every two years and updated. there should be no foreign language exceptions in fot and opi training programs. in-country language exceptions may be approved and established for opi/fot programs at foreign institutions, based on language content of military instruction. generally, opi and fot programs are not useful if they can only be offered in english. if the foreign language offering has fewer than the necessary instructors required to teach the required courses in all languages, or requires only unqualified instructors, the usg should not provide financial support.
